Lewis Grizzard wrote this story:

"Have you done your homework?" my mother would ask. "I'll do it later." "You will do it now, young man. I don't want you winding up on the third shift at Flagg-Utica." Flagg-Utica was a local textile plant. Somehow, I never could figure how failing to read three chapters in my geography book about the various sorts of vegetation to be found in a tropical rain forest had anything to do with facing a life as a mill hand. But with enough guilt and fear as catalysts, you can read anything, even geography books and Deuteronomy.

May you find a moment today to read beyond guilt and obligation, and by doing so, may you be reminded of the glory of God in the geography of the world, or the ancient stories of the Old Testament tradition, or something else wonder filled.

Have a blessed day in Christ,

Pastor Julie
